Dominga Robinson, Lawyer (she/her)

I am of Nakota and Jamaican heritage, and I am a proud citizen of the Pheasant Rump Nakota First Nation in Treaty 4. I grew up in Regina, Saskatchewan.

As an intergenerational survivor of residential schools and the Sixties Scoop, the impacts of colonization on my family and me deeply inform my perspective and fuel my passion for law. I've chosen this path to continue my advocacy work and to support

Indigenous communities in revitalizing their laws and asserting their inherent rights and sovereignty.

Before law school, I worked in non-profit funding, helping Indigenous communities revitalize their cultures and languages by securing and administering financial support. While completing my degree at the University of Saskatchewan-College of Law, I served two terms as President of the Indigenous Law Students Association. I continue to advocate for Indigenous students as the Indigenous Bar Association Student Representative.

Outside of my professional life, I love engaging in traditional ceremonies, golfing, camping, traveling, performing in theatre productions, and spending time with family, friends, my puppy Lily, and my senior cat Muffy.
